Are you a facilitator of a suicide bereavement group?

CASP recognizes that suicide bereavement support groups are invaluable in helping participants ease the profound impact of suicide loss. We also recognize that there can be unique challenges faced by those who facilitate these groups.

Across all regions of our country– remote, rural and urban – group facilitators have developed their own best practices often working in, and experiencing, isolation. For many years CASP has heard the call to bring bereavement group facilitators together for knowledge exchange, sharing of experiences and mutual support.

We are excited to launch the Suicide Bereavement Support Group Facilitators Network. This is the first group of its kind in Canada and an exciting new initiative intended to address the gap that currently exists.

By coming together, this Network will help individual facilitators share and learn in order to better support themselves and those bereaved by suicide.

Please email Kelly L'Archevêque, membership@suicideprevention.ca, to express your interest in participating in this FREE group.

A launch event will be held in April 2021! Stay tuned for further information!
